

Usability process

Most of the revisions I received in the usability process had to do with changing certain colors and images. As far as navigating and performing tasks, my site was deemed to be very straightforward and easy to use.

Revision Summary

Due to feedback from my group, I made no substantive changes to my site from a usability standpoint. However, I did make a number of aesthetic revisions, including using a dark, neutral color such as Navy, Forest Green, or Maroon for the title and text of each page. Furthermore, the images should be monochromatic and the same color as the text.

Reflection

This was a very useful process, even if this time it basically served to confirm my previously held ideas. I definitely gained some valuable insight, and I think that it could be useful to use outside advice when designing other aspects of my site. Currently, my site does not contain any significantly complicated aspects, so there was not much to critique about my plans. However, in the future, I will likely be adding more advanced features and aspects to my site, which is when feedback like this would be very useful.
